Flak Map: (Sent with Operations Order No. 87)

1. ENEMY SITUATION:

a. FLAK

(1) MILBERTSHOFEN (Primary target) lies within that section of MUNICH which, on course and rally ordered, brings the formation within effective range of 61 heavy guns, emplaced in 2 x 3, 2 x 4, 1 x 5, and 7 x 6 occupied batteries. Flak map 1537, 31 May 1944 pinpoints these batteries, flak photo graph sent with Operations Order No. 87 shows areas of density. IAH will be encountered.

(2) INNSBRUCK is defended by 63 heavy guns. If this alternate target is attacked IAH will be encountered.

(3) TREVISO is defended by 18 heavy guns. MAH is maximum enemy capability.

(4) MESTRE is defended by 12 heavy guns S to MAH is maximum enemy capability.

b. ENEMY AIRCRAFT

Intelligence Annex Fifteenth Air Force advises as follows:

(1) Encounters by 40 - 50 ME-109 a/c in ADRIATIC area and between here and Southern ALPS is very likely.

(2) Little opposition over ALPS South of SALZBURG is to be expected.

(3) From SALZBURG to and over target area estimate 70 - 80 enemy fighters, including about 20 TEF.

(4) In ADRIATIC area on return estimate that 20-25 second sorties will intercept.

(5) More and more information is available to confirm previously known tactics of enemy to seek out stragglers and loose on unescorted formations. Radio silence is of utmost importance in limiting proportions of opposition likely to be encountered.

(6) See Special Intelligence Report No. 55, 11 June 1944, Headquarters Fifteenth Air Force and disseminate this information in briefing.

c. SIGNIFICANCE OF TARGET.

(1) Due to adverse weather conditions, the attacks by Fifteenth Air Force on MUNICH area on 9 June 1944 were not sufficiently effective, necessitating further attacks on these priority targets.

(2) See Annex No. 1 to Operations Order for 9 June 1944, A-2 Section, Fifteenth Air Force, especially Paragraph II, Targets, E. MILBERTSHOFEN, Paragraph IV, Enemy Situation, Paragraph V, Essential Elements of Information, and Paragraph VII Escape Intelligence. It is recommended that Escape Intelligence Officer brief on Escape.
